Mr. Snzuki, 71, said in a written statement that he would resign "to sweep away the bad faith and hard feelings" touched off by feuding among key party factions in advance of elections for party president scheduled for Nov. 26.

The amouncement stunned political analysts here who had considered Mr. Snzuki the odds-on fa-sidered Mr. Suzuki the odds-on favorite despite mounting criticism within party ranks of his 27-month-old administration. It sent senior party bosses into a round of hasty negotiations behind the scenes to select a possible successor from among prominent Liberal Democratic Party members. It was not immediately clear, however, how or when a successor would be chosen or when Mr. Suzuki's resignation would take effect. Mr. Suzuki, who had been expected soon to make his candidacy official, said he decided to step aside to bring "fresh, new leader-ship" to a badly divided party. Ac-cording to political analysts here, however, the move may aggravate the bickering as factional party leaders vie to strengthen their

While lacking enough votes to challenge Mr. Suzuki's rule, they have castigated him for his alleged inability to prune Japan's bulging government deficits and to help spark recovery of the country's increasingly singgish economy.

By suddenly relinquishing power, Mr. Suzuki has forced the party's mainstream leadership, to which he belongs, to recalculate its own election strategies quickly. The political equation has been complicated, however, by the posi-tion of Kakuei Tanaka, a former prime minister who is widely reputed to have helped install Mr. Suzuki in office in July 1980.

The television said 148 persons had been detained in Gdansk in protests against the Polish parliament's dissolving of the independent trade union Solidarity Friday.

means that a worker's refusal to work or to follow orders can result in a court martial. After the imposition of martial law in Poland in December, the media, railways, collieries, steelworks and other key industrial plants were militarized by the authorities.

Crowds fought riot police in Gdansk and marched on Communist Party offices Tuesday after thousands of shipyard workers, shouting "Solidarity will win," held their second eight-hour strike to revive the outlawed trade union. Witnesses said police dispersed about 1,000 persons who had gathered cutside the shipyard, then fired tear gas, water cannon and smoke bombs when the crowd regrouped and surged toward the nmunist Party headquarters. Police sealed off the square in

Russia Vows Full Support Of Jaruzelski

MOSCOW - Defense Minister Dmitri F. Ustinov said Tuesday that Polish "counter-revolution-aries" were "doomed to failure" and pledged the Kremlin's "full support and assistance" to the Polish authorities.

Marshal Ustinov's pledge was contained in a message to General Wojciech Jaruzelski, the highest ranking of the Polish martial-law authorities, on the 39th anniversary of the modern Polish Army. The message was published in the Soviet Army newspaper, Krasnaya Zvezda (Red Star).

Publication of the message coincided with the outbreak of strikes in the northern Polish city of Gdansk. Marshal Ustinov's message, however, made no mention the latest developments in Poland, and it appeared that the timing of the message was coinciden-

The Soviet media have not reported the latest strikes in Poland, which were held in response to the Polish parliament's vote last Friday to outlaw the independent trade union, Solidarity.

A Western diplomat speculated that Marshal Ustinov's promise of "full support and assistance" to Poland probably referred to political support and did not constitute an implied threat of Soviet intervention of the type that the Krem-lin issued several times before the declaration of martial law in Poland last Dec. 13.

Yet, Marshal Ustinov said that Poland, as a member of the War-saw Pact, could count on Soviet

Leading Banks in U.S. Cut Prime Rate to 12%

The bond market extended its rally, with prices on long-term U.S. government securities surging as rields fell below 11 percent for the first time since the summer of 1980. Thirty-year U.S. Treasury bonds rose more than $40 for each $1,000 in face value and yields slipped from II.2 percent late Fri-day to about 10.75 percent in early trading Tuesday. The government securities markets were closed on Monday for a holiday. At the White House, President Rooald Reagan hailed the prime rate action. "I was mighty pleased to see another burst of sunshine this morning," be said at a billsigning ceremony. "I think that's one more confirmation that we're on course here."

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan said the 12-percent level was "a pretty good rate" for huilders and other businessmen, but he cautioned that the prime rate might oot fall much lower for awhile.

The dollar weakened on the news of lower rates and gold prices were little changed.

cent on Sept. 12, 1980, a period when it had started to rise and was climbing to a record of 211/2 per-

The outlook for declines in interest rates brightened last Friday when the Fed cut its discount rate to 91/2 percent from I0 percent, the lowest it has set the interest on its loans to banking institutions since November 1978.

On Saturday, Paul Volcker, the Fed chairman, told business lead-ers that with the economy weak and the U.S. money supply expected to be subjected to erratic swings by technical factors this month, the central bank would tolcrate temporary upward movements in the money supply without taking steps that would push rates higher.

The Green Line marking the division between the Moslem westem and Christian eastern sectors may still exist in people's minds, but more and more residents are crossing it.

The only way a newcomer would know where the Green Line was is by the abandoned and gutted buildings across the capital's

Mr. Hariri's company, Oger-Liban, has provided 300 trucks and buildozers and 700 workers to haul away rubble and garbage, repave streets and spruce up West Beirut.

The clearing of the war rubble is only part of the problem. West Beirut is dotted with tall apartment buildings whose sides have been sheared off by bombs and rockets or have gaping holes. Even so, residents or squatters are often living in them.

There are reported to be 128 buildings of four or more stories in central Beirut that need to be demolished. There are hundreds of others along the Green Line, leaving a monumental housing problem in the western sector. The government has decided to raze hundreds of squatters dwellings around the airport, thereby adding thousands to the list of homeless. The country's economy seems to be making a recovery too. The valne of the Lebanese pound is already somewhat stronger than its pre-June position against the U.S. dollar. Berrut banks are said to be bulging with liquid assets, amounting to more than $9 billion in de-

There is no clear estimate of the rehabilitation costs nor any tadication of where the money will come from. Mohammed Atallah, char man of the State Council for De velopment and Reconstruction, has said $12 billion will be needed just to cover war damages.

Peter McPherson, administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Development, said at a news conference in Beirut Sunday that he thought that far too high an es-timate. "Several hundreds of millions of dollars are needed, not billions, to get the infrastructure functioning again," he remarked but "if you include everyone's home, it quickly becomes billions of dollars." He said his group was providing $1 IO million.

Local press reports say that the European Community has pledged more than $100 million and that the government will try to raise $500 million in loans from West European banks.

The Khmer Rouge leader, Khieu Samphan, became vice president in charge of foreign affairs. The non-Communist groups have said that by joining with the Khmer Rouge, they hope to receive additional overseas support for their efforts to out the Vietnamese. Evidently fulfilling that expecta-tion, Singapore has supplied the Khmer People's National Liberation Front enough light infantry weapons to equip about 2,000 troops, sources said. Prince Shanouk's army reportedly has received arms for about 1,000 roops.

Until now, all three groups have been armed almost entirely by China, which has supported the Khmer Rouge for years. With an estimated 30,000 to 40,000 troops, the Khmer Rouge remains the ma-jor force opposing the 200,000-member Vietnamese occupation army.

In communiqués last week, the front said it had killed 42 Vietnamese soldiers and wounded more than 50 in operations from Sept. 20 to 28 in western Cambodia. The front said four of its troops were killed and 27 wounded in the attacks on Vietnamese checkpoints and surveillance posts. Assembly Softens EC Disclosure Plan

STRASBOURG - The European Parliament voted Tuesday to weaken substantially a European Community proposal that would force companies to disclose considerable financial and other operating information to their employees. The proposal aims to provide workers with increased access to infor-

a politically risky course that neither Mr. Reagan nor Congress may be willing to take. Instead, they may decide to move against only future benefits, which would mean little cost-cutting in 1984.

As to other domestic programs, administration planners have spoken hopefully of finding some way 1984 in the budget resolution ap-proved last spring and would ex-ceed even the $152 billion proected just last month by the Conto restrain runaway costs of the Medicare program of medical aid The $200-billion figure is not what the president will propose. Rather, it is a measure of how to the poor, which are outpacing the inflation rate. But there is doubt on Capitol Hill whether the large a problem he will face as he works in the next few months to can be brought down to an acceptable size with cuts in Medicare and bring the deficit down to acceptother entitlement programs alone.

For political reasons, presidential aides have tried to defer budget talk until after the Nov. 2 elec-The key factor in any 1984 budget outlook is the performance of the economy. Slow economic growth means smaller incomes, lower profits and thus less tax reving decisions has yet been made concerning the budget, which is for the fiscal year beginning next Oct. caue for the government. It can also mean less inflation, which also can mean less money for the tax collector. Likewise, a recessionary economy and high unemployment rates increase federal outlays for social programs. The administration's 1984 economic forecast has not yet been made. Previous administration forecasts have been criticized as too optimistic, and even last sum-mer, top administration officials were keeping their distance from the official forecast of 4.4-percent growth in 1983. The Congressional Budget Office's latest projections are based on the economy expanding at 3.6 per-cent in 1983 and 3.7 percent in 1984, and many private and con-gressional economists think the economy will expand even more slowly. According to the budget office, each 1-percent falloff in growth per year adds $10 billion to the 1983 deficit and $28 billion to the 1984 deficit.

There are other factors that may drive deficits upward. Good crops would depress farm prices for corn, wheat and soybeans, thus increasing government outlays for crop storage and support pay-will blossom into larger military outlays in 1984 and 1985. And, finally, the pressures creat-ed by rising military and entitle-ment programs will further squeeze other areas of government. "Everything else in the budget will have to stand still," the analyst added. Reagan Cites Rally on Wall Street To Defend His Economic Policies

By Leonard Downie Jr. Washington Post Service

IRVING, Texas — Pointing proudly to Monday's surge in the stock market's Dow Jones index "over the magic 1,000," President Ronald Reagan declared that his economic policies are "beginning to succeed" after what he conceded was a disappointing start.

In a spirited partisan political speech to which he added attacks on House Democratic leaders Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. of Massa-chusetts and James C. Wright Jr. of Texas, Mr. Reagan exhorted embattled Texas Republicans Monday to "go all out" to help elect a Congress that will pass the rest of his program in the coming

He asked the Republicans at a campaign rally for Representative James M. Collins, the challenger to Democratic Senator Lloyd Bentsen, to try to recruit "rankand-file Democrats [who] do not share the bigger-and-bigger-gov-ernment-is-best philosophy of the Democratic leadership in Wash-

Mr. Reagan argued that that "there's a little hypocrisy" in Mr. Wright's criticism of the proposal for a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget, which the House defeated on Oct. 1. He said Mr. Wright "has been one of the prime leaders in increasing the

The president also compared Mr. O'Neill, the House speaker, to the Pac-Man video game. He said he had asked what Pac-Man is "and somebody told me it was a round thing that gobbles up mon-ey. 1 thought that was Tip O'NeIL'

During a brief stop bere en route from his California ranch to Washington, Mr. Reagan moved away from his recent emphasis on debating responsibility for rising unemployment to stress what he called his success in reducing infla-tion, interest rates and taxes, "despite the resistance of Democratic meressional leaders."

It appeared to be a dress re-hearsal for the "economic progress report" that aides said Mr. Reagan intends to give in a nationally televised speech Wednesday night.

"We have pulled America back from the edge of disaster," Mr. Reagan told several thousand people gathered on a farm owned by the Collins family here, midway between Dallas and Fort Worth, "Yes, I had hoped we would be further along by now, but make no mistake: We are better off than 20 months ago," he said. "The problems that were destroying America in 1980 are being confronted today, paving the way for recovery."

Unemployment in Texas has risen rapidly to 8.4 percent, the highest since monthly figures were first released here in 1970. Nationally, the rate is 10.1 percent. But Mr. Reagan instead stressed that he has done away with double-digit inflation and created new confidence in the financial community, which he said was evidenced by falling interest rates and a surging stock market.

The president added, "It is tragic that the House leadership re-cessed to campaign, leaving so much unfinished business behind." He listed inner-city enterprise zones, tuition tax credits, regulatory reform and a crime-fighting package among the unfinished

Mr. Reagan also emphasized the Republicans' need to regain the support of Democrats who had voted for him in 1980.

Recent national polls have shown, however, that many - if not most - of the Reagan Democrats intend to return to the party fold in November. This could cost the Republican governor, Bill Clements, his job, make it impossi-ble for Mr. Collins to catch Mr. Bentsen and ruin Republicans' hopes to increase the number of seats in the state's 24-member delegatioo in Congress — or even hold on to the five seats they won

One survivor, 57-year-old Mateo Ramos Paiz, said last week that he saw much of the killing and was saved when he was trapped under the corpses of 10 men who had been killed by grenades.

Another villager said he escaped when he and seven other peasants were ordered to bring two cous from nearby fields to be slaughtered to feed the soldiers.

"I was sure we were going to be killed," recalled Andrés Paiz Gar-cia, "and I decided to hide." The seven others returned to the village and were murdered, as were his wife and nine children, he said.

In the refugee camps that oow string Mexico's border with Guatemala, reports of such massacres are common. Most refugees say they fled here after killings by the army in their own or nearby com-munities. Most seem to have had a relative, friend or acquaintance who died in the violence that has swept the Guatemalan highlands in the past three months.

Mr. Paíz García, 45, said he was in San Francisco when 500 soldiers and six colonels arrived around 11 A.M. on Saturday, July 17. Shortly afterward, he recalled, a helicopter landed and some men were ordered to help unload boxes.

The soldiers then called all the

Democrats Try to Stop Reagan's Talk on TV

New York Times Service NEW YORK - Officials of the Democratic Party have filed a formal protest with the major television octworks, urging them oot to carry an address on the economy by President Ronald Reagan Wednesday night because of its partisan political nature,

"Coming as this does 20 days before the midterm election," the officials said, "and in the course of the campaign in which the president and his economic policies have been the major issues, we believe that it would be unwise and unfair in the extreme for the networks to carry this speech live."

The protest was sent in a tele-gram to ABC, CBS, NBC, Cable News Network and Satellite News Channel, by Charles T. Manatt, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, Representative Tony Coelho of California, chairman of the Congressional Campaign Committee, and Senator Wendell H. Tell the homefolks how you're getting around Europe and make a pretty fare saving on the call.

Traveling through Europe can be a moving experience—and you want to stop just long enough to tell your family and friends about it. Check out the money-saving tips below, then give them a call. It's the first-class way to reach them—at bargain rates.

Save on surcharges. Many hotels outside the U.S. charge exorbitant surcharge fees on international calls. And sometimes the fees are greater than the cost of the call itself. But if your hotel has TELEPLAN, the way to keep hotel surcharges reasonable, go ahead and call. No Teleplan? Read on! There are other ways to save money.

Save with a shortie. In most countries there's no three-minute minimum on selfdialed calls. So if your hotel offers International Dialing from your room, place a short call home and have them call you back. And you pay for the callback from the States with dollars, not local currency, when you get your next home or office phone bill. Save these other ways. Telephone Company Calling Card and collect calls may be placed in many countries. And where they are, the hotel surcharges on such calls are usually low. Or, you can avoid surcharges altogether by calling from the post office or from other telephone centers.

Save nights & weekends. Always check to see whether the country you're in has lower rates at night and on weekends Usually the savings are considerable. Now you'll get more mileage for your money.

this unprecedented tide of foreign investment is all oil money coming from the Middle East. No. Some, but not much, foreign oil money goes into business investments in the United States. The huge flow last year came in significant part from France, where a Socialist government had been elected. It came from Britain, the Netherlands and West Germany. It came from Canada, where business distrust of the Trudeau government was deepening. For the first time there was substantial investment from Japan.

These surges last year violated conventiontheory, since the high exchange rate of the dollar made it expensive for foreigners to move their money in. It seems that they were willing to pay a stiff premium for security.

Perhaps the 1981 pattern will persist; perhaps it won't. But the amounts of money are large enough to influence the way the international economy works, and this abrupt break in a long-established trend is an authentic reflection of states of mind around the world. Financial statistics are the most sincere public opinion poll. They suggest that, among people who have or manage capital, pessimism is far more severe in the other industrial countries than in America.

Other Opinion

A New Version of the WPA

Traditionally America has relied on a stubbornly individualistic approach to the prob-lem of unemployment. There is little or no coordination or coherent sense of purpose. Government provides cushions and stopgaps, industry hires and fires with the flow and ebb of the business cycle, and labor scrambles to get - and hold on to - whatever it can.

That is no longer enough. The profound changes at work in the job market require a new era of cooperation among all sectors of society, a rigorous attention to preventing the economic and human pain of sweeping dislocation. Any effective agenda for putting America back to work and keeping it there will demand sacrifices on many fronts and action on a wide range of nagging problems.

There is one kind of investment that only the government can handle: the massive American infrastructure of highways, bridges, sewers, ports and dams that support the es, sewers, ports and tails that support the nation's commerce. And it is one area in which the government can actually create jobs. After decades of neglect, the infrastructure needs hundreds of billions of dollars in repairs, and failing to address them would cost the economy considerably more. The notion of control of court in some of the nation's 11 miles. tion of putting some of the nation's 11 mil-lion unemployed to work in a new version of

Perplexity in Spain

It would be absurd not to recognize the widespread public perplexity over the sketchy and confused news being published about the latest attempted coup d'état. An objective re-constitution of the facts leads us to believe that the conspiracy was the most serious of any mounted until now. A broad, hard-line conspiracy was in preparation against the government, probably hatched in the cells of men previously imprisoned for military rebellion. The danger in granting such lenient treatment to those prisoners could not have been unknown to the government.

And we certainly do not imagine that the government believes that with the detention of three leaders and the unveiling of their plans the nuclei of the conspiracy have been shattered. So what we must now ask ourselves is whether our faith should continue to be hlind, or whether we Spaniards have the right to be informed of our own dangers and right to be informed of them, to defend ourselves from them,

Yes, the Soviet Giant Is Sick

WASHINGTON — Picture a country unable to feed itself, dependent on their to keep up with modern science, and in a grisly de-cline in the telltale measures of infant mortality and survival of the elderly. Only one country matches that dismal profile: the Soviet Union militarily mighty to a fearsome extent, but also internally ill to an extent that rarely receives sufficient attention in the West.

Nasty northern latitudes are conveniently blamed for the debacle of Soviet agriculture. But incredible mismanagement at the national level rather than poor weather, has wrecked the productivity of Soviet farmland, according to an authorita-tive new study of Soviet grain production by Lester R. Brown, an agri-cultural economist who heads the Worldwatch Institute, a private think tank based in Washington.

The Worldwatch study points out that the Soviet Union, which was long an exporter of grain, has now blundered into its fourth successive serious grain shortage. With a shortfall of 46 million tons this year, Mr. Brown reports, the Soviet Union faces major annual grain deficits well into the future icits well into the future.

At the heart of their difficulties, he writes, is rigid planning that makes the worst of relatively unfavorable climatic conditions. Al-though the Soviets spend heavily on efforts to boost productivity, Mr. Brown reports, they persist in trying to plan for the unplannable, such as local weather conditions and shifting pesticide requirements.
In the mid-1950s the United States and the Soviet Union were quite close in grain production; since the mid-1970s Soviet produc-tion has declined and America last year outproduced it in grain by 331 million to 165 million tons. In science, which Soviet ideology traditionally hails as the foundation of the modern industrial state, the Soviets have long relied on Western laboratories to lead the way to new knowledge. Although they spend heavily on research and put great stress on training scientists and engi-neers, the Soviets excel only in those fields that require heavy construction and long-range planning, such as space, nuclear power and atom smashing. Otherwise they are aston-ishingly backward, especially in the new and delicate electronic and etic sciences that are keystones of advanced industrial prowess.

The curse on their system, openly acknowledged by westward-looking Soviet researchers, is centralized planning compounded by excessive secrecy, plus, in biology, the lingermg effects of Stalin's decrees on ideologically acceptable science. To help make up for their science and technology deficit, the Soviets have resorted to purchase and espionage. But, m a newly issued assessment of Soviet prying on American science, an expert committee of the U.S. National Academy of Sciences has expressed doubt about the Soviets' ability to exploit their acquisitions of foreign science for military purposes.

There is no doubt that they are collecting a lot of material, said the committee, but it may not flow read-ily to Soviet military designers be-cause of the highly secretive and compartmentalized nature of Soviet military research and the development and procurement process. In seeking to dampen the flow, the Academy experts warned, let us not emulate the mindless security procedures that have helped to make the Soviets scientific beggars.

For assessing the basic physical qualities of a society — mutition. nousing, environmental safety and health care - the ultimate reckoning shows up in vital statistics for

In the early 1970s, alone among industrialized countries, the Soviet Union began a deterioration. Between 1971 and 1976, for example, infant mortality increased from 22.9 to more than 30 deaths per 1,000 live births — double the U.S. rate. Similar shifts occurred in other measures of health. Thereupon the Soviets, again alone among modern nations, simply stopped publishing the embarrassing vital statistics. Why should one of the world's two great space and nuclear powers be losing its ground in the survival of its infants and old people? Hints gleaned from Soviet public health journals and other sources point to poor nutrition, alcoholism, environ-mental pollution, a backward phar-maceutical and infant-formula industry, and overstaffed but underequipped bealth services. It is trite to say that, well, after all, we know the Russians aren't 10

But Can Dr. Reagan's Stand-Off Therapy Work?

WASHINGTON — From the National Security Council comes a speech on "The Soviet Un-ion in Crisis" that spells out what appears to be tantalizing Ronald Reagan about the world scene.

It is the Washington swan song of Richard Pipes, the NSC's Soviet specialist, who heads back to Harvard soon. Cleared and toxted by Mr. Reagan's national security adviser, William P. Clark, the speech was delivered in West Germany last week. What tantalizes Mr. Reagan is the notion that the Soviet Union is in the grip of a multi-faceted systemic is, one evident not only in the usual economic and social indicators but also in Moscow's inability to deliver on its numerous strategic and economic commitments. (That is the reason the Kremlin has been passive in Lebanon, Mr. Pipes suggests.)

What is Moscow's way out? A violent collapse of the Soviet regime is unlikely, Mr. Pipes judges. A reversion to Stalinism is unrealistic. A more rational option is liberal economic reform on the Hungarian model of "goulash communism."

By Stephen S. Rosenfeld

The Hungarian model is designed The Hungarian model is designed to increase productivity by the offering of incentives, while keeping the Communist Party's domination intact. The Soviet Umon's dynamic and illegal "second economy" in feed and beging may already be food and housing may already be taking the country that way. Liberal reform could produce a turn inward, away from expansionism and toward domestic concerns, Mr. Pipes argues. But at this point he attacks the pro-detente approach, which he presents as holding that Soviet reform can best be encouraged "by making life easier for the Soviet authorities — by showering them and their clients with cheap credits; by enabling them, again on credit, to earn large sums of hard currency; by limiting one's reactions to their global ventures to verbal chastisement, and by responding to the Soviet military challenges with

Mr. Pipes goes on: "Now no responsible persons can have any illusions that it is in the power of the a minimal deterrent."

West to alter the Soviet system or to bring the Soviet economy to its knees. These are spurious objectives. What one can and ought to strive for is compelling the Soviet regime to bear the consequences of its own priorities.

"We should not make it easier for the [ruling apparatus] to have its cake and eat it - to maintain an inefficient system ... and build up an aggressive military force and expand globally. Any attempt to help the Soviet Union out of its economic predicament both eases the pressure for internal reform and reduces the need for global retrenchment." So, he concludes, shut down the Soviet natural gas pipeline.

There is logic to Mr. Pipes's thesis. Why should the West make it easier for the Kremlin to compete with it? But this is logie in a political vacuum. It disregards the difficulties of bringing along the European al-lies, whose total annual trade with the Soviet bloc is something like a dozen times America's and whose politics are not rigged to allow any European government, even if it were so minded, to apply a Reagan-like squeeze. (Let us leave aside, for use squeeze, (Let us leave asiae, for considerations of delicacy, the giant U.S. grain sales to Moscow on which the allies cannot help but gag.)

Mr. Pipes's line, seconded strongly in the Pentagon, is dominant in the White House today. It explains why the United States has an East-West policy that is convulsing the al-lies and giving the Soviets a free ride toward their traditional goal of sapping Europe's Atlantic ties.

All this means, moreover, that the truly vital question of Atlantic policy that is coming due in 1983 - will the Europeans stick to their resolve to install new missiles if arms control talks stall? — will have to be treated in the worst possible conditions of an atmosphere heavy with the European reaction to Mr.

Reagan's pipeline policy.
One sees from Mr. Pipes's time where President Reagan is coming from on the pipeline issue. But where is he going?

When Debate Beams Clearly To Deaf Ears

By David S. Broder

CAN FRANCISCO - For one D hour last Wednesday evening two contestants in the race for a United States Senate seat debated with due seriousness, the questions of strategic arms control, NATO forces, trade relations, immigration, Middle East policy and human rights.

The forum had been arranged by the League of Women Voters for California's Gov. Jerry Brown and his Republican opponent, San Diego Mayor Pete Gilson. The debate was remarkably devoid of verbal tricks and chesp shots. Both men had pre-pared well and both spoke with clarity and occasional eloquence. It was a welcome change from the pattern of a campaign which, like many others this year, had been dominated by 30-second television spots aimed mainly at denigrating the adversary's character and competence. The only trouble was that if you did not happen to be within range of a Sau Francisco television station you had difficulty seeing it.

The debate was carried live by two local stations, but in the great Los Angeles television area where 40 per-cent of the state's voters live it was available only on the UHF public television outlet, and there with a two-hour delay. The commercial stations in Los Angeles — and in most other cities — declined to make room for the debate on their schedules. What the broadcasters are saying, in essence, is that their normal commercial fare is more important than the exposure of their huge audiences to the views of the men whose policies may decide the ratification of future nuclear arms treaties or the shape of future military budgets.

This is not a parochial matter. The three main Los Angeles channels are owned by the national networks, and their management decisions reflect endemic values in that industry. Complaints of lack of television coverage of the campaign have been heard in many states this year.

These stations are huge profit cen-ters, with some of the profits in an election year coming from the mil-tions of dollars of individual political contributions that are funneled directly into television advertising.

Voters who had doubts about Mr. Brown or Mr. Gilson would, I think, have been pleased by the knowledge each displayed and the calm, reasoned way each presented his views. Those voters would have heard them define their differences on the best strategy for achieving a nuclear arms agreement and the best way to decade. Western Europe in the next decade. ent and the best way to defend

Los Angeles voters did not see that debate. On the CBS affiliate they saw an episode of "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers," in which "a romance between Crane and a veterinarian turns into a dilemma when the vet is awarded a medical internship that will separate them," to quote the listing in the Los Angeles Times. On the NBC affiliate it was "Real People," with a "salute to Chicago," including "baseball legends of Wrigley Field." On ABC it was the 1968 Rock Hudson film "Ice Station Zehra."

I would like to hear the explanations of the television executives. The Washington Post.

Again, the Old American Recoil From Europe By William Pfaff

CHARLESTON, West Virginia - Hostility toward Western Europe is growing among an American public upset by Europe's commitment to the Soviet pipeline, by economic competition from Europe and by what too often is seen as Europe's unwillingness to defend itself.

Never mind that each of these indictments is partial or simply wrong due to ignorance. What counts is what people think, and these are the things a great many Americans are thinking. They do so not only in the small cities of the country but also in New York boardrooms and in Washington. These semiments can be found ex-pressed by columnists in papers like The New York Times and can be heard in broadcast commentaries. They are, of course, the commonplaces of the neo-conservative magazines and think tanks. It is said that since the Europeans won't defend themselves, why should America do it? It is said that one reason why the U.S. economy is troubled and its exports fare badly against Enropean and Japanese competition is that the United States spends more on defense than Europe or Japan on forces meant to defend Europe and Japan.

These Americans ask why U.S. technology should be appropriated by European companies to give the Soviet Union a new natural gas pipeline network, fueling Soviet industry as well as earning hard currency for the Soviet Union abroad.

One can try to answer that this all grotesquely oversimplifies what really is going on in Western Europe, vastly underestimates the real European contribution to Western defense, ignores the underlying cause of the U.S.-European split on the pineline issue and the reasons why many Europeans have come to distrust the United States. But it is all but impossible to shake the conviction of a growing number of Americans that the United States, somehow, is being victimized by those same Europeans whom the American people, over the years, have sent their sons to defend.

The mood is resentment. It is wry rather than bitter, but it is dismissive of Europe. Does this change of opinion in the United States change U.S. foreign policy? The simple answer is: not yet. First of all, people overestimate the ease with which trans-Atlantic ties could be cut. Those ties actually are tough and dense. The two sides depend on one another. The idea that Europe doesn't really mean much to American economic well-being, and that its security is irrelevant to America's, will not bear serious examination. The notion that the United States can turn to Asia and Latin America for equivalent markets overlooks the fact that industrial states trade most profitably with the other industrial societies. An advocate of such a shift, Ronald Nairn, wrote last year in The Wall Street Journal: "There is East Asia, so vast in its potential as to stagger the imagination. There is also the Pacific rim of South America and beyond that South Asia and Africa. When we measure the near-optimized markets of Europe and its 250 million persons against the 1.5 billion to 2 billion people of the Pacific Basin alone, Europe seems a puny affair." And indeed it does — except that nearly all the people in East and South Asia, South America and Africa-are poor, indifferent to what the United States produces (except perhaps its food) and unfortunately likely to remain so for a very long time. But it must also be said that an American withdrawal from Europe, to a background of resentment and relief, is consistent with a deep, historically grounded, American distrust of Europe and of Europeans — an old American impulse to distance the country from Western Europe.

The isolationism of the 1920s and 1930s is only a memory now, and usually an imperfect one. I ordinarily is thought to have been a right-wing phenomenon, an affair of Midwestern Republi cans, but until Pearl Harbor there were nearly as many liberal isolationists as conservative ones.

Today's "unilateralists," as the advocates of an American break with Europe are coming to be called, are the direct descendants of the old isolationists, complete to their elders' paradoxical taste for involvements in Asia. There really is nothing surprising in isolationism's return. It is in the American grain to stand apart from Europe.

A Case for Withdrawing Most U.S. Forces From Europe

come for the United States to begin withdrawing most of its ground forces from Europe and to adopt a global strategy based on sea power.

Such a course is dictated by two developments: the steady political disintegration of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization as an instrument for mustering an adequate defense of Western Europe, and the emergence of a host of new threats to vital U.S. security interests in Southwest Asia and other areas outside Europe where the United States does not enjoy po-litically secure military access ashore. se developments require a basic reappraisal of the wisdom of continuing to allocate the bulk of U.S.

ground forces to Europe. Current strategic and international political conditions are a far cry from those that governed the world when

NATO was founded in 1949.

Then the United States possessed a virtual monopoly of nuclear weapons. Europe was the most likely locus of overt Soviet aggression, and the de-ployment of large U.S. ground forces there was deemed a necessary though temporary means of providing a shield behind which the prostrate al-lies could recover from World War II.

Today America no longer enjoys nuclear superiority, much less a monopoly, and Europe is no longer the most likely arena of overt Soviet aggression. Furthermore, the NATO allies are more than capable of assuming full responsibility for their own ense on the ground.

Despite this transformation in the global strategic environment, many of America's allies steadfastly refuse to fulfill their responsibilities to their own defense or to the defense of common interests outside Europe. As in 1949, they continue to look to America to shoulder a disproportionate share of the burden for their protection. The situation begs for change.

The fault cannot be ascribed wholly to the Europeans. The foremost mistake of the United States since signing the North Atlantic Treaty has been its failure to insist that the primary responsibility for West Europe-an security rests with the Europeans. The prospect increases every year that an angry Congress may force an abrupt withdrawal of U.S. troops. Such a step could push the NATO allies into further accommodation with the Soviet Union. This would serve neither their security interests nor those of the United States. On the other hand, 35 years of entreaties by Washington have failed to elicit from these same allies adequate efforts to provide a credible defense of Western Europe. It is time for Washington to adopt a different approach to collective defense.

Europeans know that it intends, over the next 10 to 15 years, to withdraw all U.S. ground forces from the European continent other than those assoiated with NATO's theater nuclear forces. The retention in Europe of existing U.S. tactical air and theater nuclear forces — to which 60,000 per-sonnel are assigned in West Germany alone — would make it impossible for the Soviet Union to avoid early and heavy combat with Americans in the event of war. This defeats the argument that a withdrawal of U.S. ground forces would be tantamount to an abdication of America's commitment to European defense. In sum, the United States would be abandoning neither its membership in NATO nor its commitment to Europe's defense. Only the character of that commitment would be altered. America's comparative military advantage has always resided in naval and air power. (The continental military traditions of Germany are still reflected in its primary focus on land weaponry.) In place of the Pentagon's current plans for a possible land war in Central Europe, U.S. strategy would be shifted to fashioning a The United States should let the smaller, more agile army designe react rapidly to crisis situations in the Third World, where vital Western is terests are far more immedia threatened than they are in Burope. A reduction in the size of the army would make resources available for hadly needed expansion of naval, ma-rine and tactical air forces.

By gradually shifting to a predominantly maritime strategy, Washington would offer its allies time and opportunity to construct a meaningful ground defense of Western Europe one backed by American air, nava and nuclear power. Such an approach would also serve as a powerful hear sgainst the trans-Atlantic confroits-tion that would surely attend my abrupt congressional withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Europe.

During the hearings it was noted that several Canadian airlines voluntarily sell extra seats to overweight or large passengers at half fare, though this is not widely advertised Regulations covering the extra seats were to have gone into effect Aug. 31, but, as a result of the opposition of the airline association and the acknowledged problems of carrying out the move, has been delayed and more hearings are being considered. there are any blacks in the Super Bowl's andience. Sun City is ear-nestly multiracial in its hiring and training programs and in the management of its facilities, practicing only an economic segregation that is hardly restricted to southern Africa. At the same time, it promises its performers that they will be playing to mixed audiences.

"I don't mind about anything except that I'm playing in front of mixed audiences," Minnelli was able to reply when she was challenged with a political question at a Johannesburg news conference. A member of her entourage said she knew nothing about the tribal homelands such as Bophuthatswaphuthatswanans — are a negligible price to pay for a chance to pierce na or their place in the South African system of migrant labor. "She's just doing a gig," he said.

The paradox is that the audience be far more multiracial if a star like Minnelli consented to per-form in Johannesburg, but such is the stigma against performing in South Africa that the stars who are tempted by the kind of money that Southern Suns is ready to pay are relieved to bear that Bophuthatswana is someplace else. The fact that many blacks reject this idea, insisting that the whole of South Africa is their country, is then dismissed by their touring managers and spokesmen as a local subtlety that a busy entertainer could hardly be expected to under-

Ayckbourn's 'Upstream' Sinks

By Sheridan Morley

ONDON - The National Theatre bas been messing about with boats for far too long; but now that they have finally got Alan Ayckbourn's "Way Up-stream" away from its mooring and and into the water of the Lyttelton stage tank, it turns out to resemble nothing so much as the Titanic. Considering the vast amount of time and money that has been spent launching this aquatic disaster, you'd think the management would have first ascertained that the play would float.

Instead they are offering this waterlogged account of two archetypal Ayckbourn couples adrift on a comic voyage which turns into something vastly more portentous as the boat approaches (I kid you not) Armageddon Bridge. If Ayckbourn had found a small bottle in which to put his message about the survival of the mildest be would have saved a lot of time and trouble, not least to himself as authordirector. As things are, the National might have at least ensured that the water that caused all the delays was visible; from live rows back the boat might as well have been on wheels. The sooner it gets a de-cent burial at sea the better; maybe then the National might be able to use the tank for a revival of least a personal appearance by Esther Williams.

Peter Nichols may not be Britain's greatest living dramatist (in-deed like John Arden he has recently threatened to give up being a dramatist at all), but he is certainly Britain's most remarkable stage archivist. Having in "Privates on Parade" disinterred one derelict theatrical form, the revue, and used it to tell some of the truth about the British Army overseas after the war, he now, in "Poppy," the RSC's first production of a new script at the Barbican, takes a still more dessicated form, that of the Victorian pantomime, and uses it for a bitter study of British opium-pushing in China a century

THE LONDON STAGE

The result is admittedly patchy and, in the second half, inclined to drift closer to "The King and I" than "Aladdin", but the ootion itself is so much more courageous than anything else being done in subsidized concrete palaces, and it allows for moments of such utter delight, that bits of "Poppy" are a lot better than no "Poppy" at

The trouble starts somewhere around the intermission, by which time a pantomime convention complete with dames and principal boys and a two-man horse, all lovingly recreated in defiance of Far-rah's modern-musical settings, can no longer contain all that Nichols wants to say about the complex corruption of the Victorian opium runners. Like Sondheim with "Pacifie Overtures" (a remarkably similar exercise in mismatched Oriental form and content) Nichols suddenly finds himself defeated by his own framework, and only at the last walkdown is be able to pull the whole thing togeth-

Emboldened by their success with "Swan's Down Gloves," last Christmas at the Aldwych and some David Toguri choreography which is (I hope) a brilliant parody of every Windsor pantomine I ever spent my childhood at, the company takes to the format like the addicts they are occasionally asked to play.
I'm not convinced (despite the aforementioned 'Swan's Down Gloves') that the director, Terry Hands, entirely understands the lost world of pantomimes that Nichols is attempting to conjure up, and his casting is a bit thin, but in Geraldine Gardner he has discovered the most blazing stage-musical talent in years, while Stephen Moore manages a constantly faithful and endearing Jack. In short, what we have here is a flawed spectacular of considerable fascination; this may be your only chance to see a song sheet lowered from the Barbican flies, and I'd not be inclined to miss a moment of it. In the wake of "Annie" and

'Charlie Brown" and "Li'l Abner' it was, I suppose, inevitable that somebody should think of making a musical out of Reg Smythe's "Andy Capp." But if ever a strip cartoon defied musicalization, this one is it; "Andy" has no plot, no hidden depths, few friends of much interest even to him. The strip is in effect a series of linked single gags, and in staging it at the Aldwych Trevor Peacock (book and lyrics) and Alan Price (music and lyrics) have been unable to put together more than the barest outline of a plot. Thus we have Andy deserted by long-suffering wife. Andy returned to (for no apparent reasoo) by her and Andy trying, not with much successon the night I witnessed, to catch a boming pigeon during his nephew's wedding.

Tom Courtenay does a likeable if soft turn as Andy and the rest of the cast in Braham Murray's Manchester Royal Exchange produc-tion cluster respectfully around him in o semi-circle while he utters some of Smythe's more memorable one-liners about the state of male chauvinist piggery in an oddly undefined north country pub-world.

The setting would appear to be mid-1950s Bleak, the songs (performed on stage by Price) are blandly forgettable and addicts of the atrip will doubtless feel nt home. Andy does not however achieve an independent theatrical life, and his survival at the Aldwych will depend on the efficiency with which Daily Mirror readers can be bused in to that former temple of RSC upmarket cul-

PARIS — Jean Yanne is a Gallic cousin of Ken Russell, Mel Brooks and Monty Python. Out to demystify history and august personages, be sends up-Caesar. Cleopatra and the Roman Empire in "Denx heures moins le quart avant Jesus-Christ," a bawdy parody of Hollywood's costumed epics.

As theatrical travesty was introduced by Aristo-phanes, circa 425 B.C., the Yanne scheme is scarcely an innovation, but it still works. His film drew a bigger gross during its initial week than any other movie, native or imported, seen in France this year.

Yame has no more subtlety than a riveter and makes as much noise. He is not, however, a skilled worker. His script is as clumsy as its title and the direction is of like delicacy. He baits every sequence with gross anachronisms, stalking the belly laugh and bagging it more often then not.

His Caesar is an effeminate fop who, visiting his African colooy, meets the Siren of the Nile, but due to biological deficiency is appalled by the suggestion that be marry her. He is played by Michel Serrault for super camp. Coluche, the music hall bumpkin, is a Ben Hur who drives an armored tank in a chariot race and Françoise Fabian's Cleopatra has strayed from the burlesque boards. The author-director's colleagues from television add to the hilarity, as do Yanne himself as a subversive taxi chauffeur who hatches a plot to unionize gladiators. In the last moments there is an insert of the Nativity.

Pierre Schoendoerffer is an earnest and well-intentioned author, but as a filmmaker he seems to lack the necessary fire. His latest work, "L'Honneur d'un capibetween numbers, the star never taine" is a lengthy discussion on the Algerian war. As once ventured into their world by it would be impossible to explain the Algerian war to

When on a television panel a leftist professor slurs the reputation of a French captain slain in the Algerian campaign, the officer's widow brings suit. The captain's comportment in combat is reviewed at the trial. The widow wins, but is left with some doubts over the enigmatic evidence. There are flashbacks to the battles and the searches for informers, with Jacques Perrin as the captain, but most of the footage is devoted to courtroom sessions, well played by Nicole Garcia as the offended widow, Georges Wilson as her adviser and Charles Denner as the defense attorney.

One respects Schoendoerffer's sincerity, but though he presents the case he never makes a case. Gripping drama is apt to achieve its emotional surge not by logical reasoning but more often by deliberately dis-honest black-and-white contrasts. His film is honest and honorable, but it is a bit dull.

Mario Monicelli's "Le Marquis s'amuse" is an Italian harlequinade set in Rome at the time of the Napoleonic wars. It provides the versatile comedian Alberto Soldi with a dual role. He is at once the capricious playboy nobleman and the drunken plebeian, kidnapped in an alcoholic slumber to awake in a palace bedroom and honored for a spell as the mischief-making marquis. Soldi delivers hilarious characterizations and there is an amusing cameo by Paola Stoppa as the pope threatened by the demands of the Corsican. The handsome photography sets the period with lavish de-tail and costuming for yet another spirited and spicy comedy from the Italian studios.

NEW YORK — The Police De-partment of Waterbury, Connecti-cut, has opened a criminal investigation into employee charges of illegal chemical dumping by a toxic-waste treatment company. The health director of Waterbury, Dr. Gert Wallach, described himself as "shaken" by the charges. He said that be would seek new tests, and that if the allegations were true, then he had been "hoodwinked by the compa-

The company, Environmental Waste Removal Inc., issued a statement denying that wastes were buried under its 26-acre property along the Naugatuck River. It called such charges "false" and attributed them to "disgrantled past employees who were discharged for improperly performing their duties" and who, the company said, could face "legal action" for "false and harmful statements."

"We can assure our generators and customers that any material submitted to EWR in the past has been documented and that any material submitted in the future will be properly treated," the state-ment said. Ron Jones, a company spokesman, said be would not respond to questions going beyond the state-ment. Calls to the company later Monday were not returned The charges were raised by two workers in an article Monday in The New York Times.

The two past employees, Richard Goodson, the company's former technical director, and Joseph Lambo, a laborer and office worker, said they had witnessed and participated in illegal disposals of toxic and radioactive wastes into the river, into the municipal sewer system and under the company property itself.

Mr. Goodson said he was discharged for failing to go along with improper disposal of hazardous wastes. Mr. Lambo said be had left his job at Environmental Waste Removal with full pay, after a leg injury.

The two present employees, who would not allow their names to be used, said the illegal dumping had largely ceased five or six months ago, under federal pressure. Lieutenant Val Bochicchio, a police detective, said he had received his order for a criminal investigation from Mayor Edward . Bergin at a meeting Monday. The Federal Bureau of Investigation is conducting its own inquiry into the dumping allegations.

TOKYO — China gave North Korea 40 MiG-21 fighter aircraft earlier this year as a friendly ges-ture, rather than as a move to end Pyongyang's basic reliance on Soviet arms supplies, the Japanese newspaper Asahi Shimbun report-ed.Tuesday.

Quoting Japanese Defense Agency sources, the newspaper said that the aircraft were flown to North Korea in March and April. The Asahi Shimbun said that North Korea already had 120 Soviet-made MiG-21s and 80 Chines built MiG-19s and that the Chinese MiG-21s would not change the balance of strength between the air forces of North and South there was no justification for linking independence for Namibia and the presence of Cuban troops in Angola, The New York Times reported from New York.

General Taylor Reflects on Lessons From the Cuban Missile Crisis

By Maxwell D. Taylor Washington Post Service

This is the season for drawing "lessons" for our own age from the Cuban missile crisis of 20 years ago. Aiready, such notable participants as Dean Rusk, Robert MacNamara and McGeorge Bundy, among others, have been heard from, and alay, among others, have been heard from, and al-ready, there is considerable disagreement as to whether there really are any such "lessons" to be drawn and, if so, what they are. Here Gen. Tay-lor — a former army chief of staff and chairman of the Jahu Chief of Staff — who was a key plaver, offers his view.

Twenty years ago, on the morning of Oct. 16, President John F. Kennedy and his immediate advisers saw for the first time the aerial photography revealing Soviet ballistic missiles being installed in Cuba. Their presence had being installed in Cuba. Their presence had been suspected for a long time, but Soviet lead-ers had emphatically denied it. One of them, Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko, repeat-ed the denial in the Oval Office on Oct. 18, two days after the president had learned the truth.

Summoning the senior officials of the State and Defense departments, the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the CIA to his office, the president received the first reaction of the advisers who would serve him in the ensuing "secret crisis." These men, acting as his advisory staff under the improvised title of EXCOMM (Executive Committee of the National Security Council), were to assist him in making the many difficult decisions that lay ahead. An observer might have found it ominous that some of the EX-COMM had served the president in a similar capacity at the time of the Bay of Pigs fiasco in

In discussing the situation in this first meeting on Oct. 16. Mr. Kennedy gave no evidence of shock or trepidation resulting from the threat to the nation implicit in the discovery of the missiles, but rather of deep but controlled anger at the duplicity of the Soviet officials who had tried to decrive him. Clearly, he had in mind hut a single purpose to get the missiles out of Cuba before they were capable of delivering a warhead on an American target. The task of the members of EXCOMM was to find the best way to accomplish this purpose and to do so, the president reminded us, in absolute

There followed six days of seemingly endless secret meetings in the course of which EX-COMM members studied all available intelligence, determined the limited number of alternatives worthy of consideration and eventually reduced that number to two, each with its partisan supporters. The alternative favored by the "hawks," a group to which I belonged, was to launch an air attack without warning on all the located missiles and Il-28 bombers that constituted the "offensive weapons" the presi-dent had determined to remove. The insistence on surprise reflected our concern that Nikita Khrushchev, the Soviet prime minister, if warned, might quickly move the missiles into hiding, thereby making it necessary to invade Cuba to get them out. For many of us, the invasion of Cuba was to be avoided at almost

Partial Naval Blockade

The "doves," on the other hand, recommonded a partial naval blockade, euphemistically called a quarantine, to keep out further weapons. Most of them, however, were prepared to consider more drastic action if a quarantine proved insufficient.

During the ensuing meetings, these options were houly debated, with the president usually in attendance except when, to preserve secrecy, be was obliged to make public appearances to which he was already committed. Thus, as the formed as to the differing points of view of his mind until Oct. 21 following a discussion with Lieutenant General Walter Sweeney Jr., who commanded the Tactical Air Command, which would have carried out any air raid on the missiles. General Sweeney's frank admission that any such operation could not guarantee the destruction of all the weapons attacked reinforced an already perceptible inclination of the president to adopt the quarantine option. At the same time, however, he wanted the armed forces to be prepared for any likely contingen-cy, to include an invasion of the island. Such was the final decision embodied in his television address on the evening of Oct. 22.

Essential Facts

Before addressing the nation on Oct. 22, there was much for the president to do in preparation for it. In the afternoon, he called the leaders of Congress to the White House and there informed them of the situation and his intentions. He had the essential facts transmitted to our principal NATO allies, the Organization of American States and our emba about the world. Then at 7 P.M., he stepped to the microphone and informed a startled country and a perturbed world what had happened and what was in store.

Thus ended the "secret crisis," and the open power confrontation between Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Khrushchev began. Action and event followed in quick succession thereafter.

In execution of the president's order, the armed forces promptly set in motion a partial mobilization that eventually resulted in the concentration of a quarter of a million men in Florida and neighboring states. Simultaneously, the Air Defense Command and the Strategic Air Command prepared themselves to de-fend the United States and its neighbors against air attack and the remote possibility of some form of nuclear threat. Mr. Khrushchev, caught by surprise with his missiles only partly installed, protested loudly and at length against Mr. Kennedy's actions and threats. Nonetheless, within three days he had ordered home his missile-bearing ships at sea rather than run the risk of breaching the

On Oct. 29, he capitulated completely, announcing that he would dismantle his offensive weapons and would return them to their source if Mr. Keanedy would promise not to invade

But the crisis did not end here. Fidel Castro, the Cuban president, refused to return the Il-28s, which he claimed to be his own and not on-site verification of the removal of the weap-ons covered by Mr. Khrushchev's agreement.

After weeks of wrangling, Mr. Castro agreed to surrender the bombers, but Mr. Kennedy had to be satisfied with photographic verification of the departing weapons exposed on the decks of Soviet ships headed home. Since Mr. Castro never permitted international verification, a primary condition of Mr. Kennedy's promise not to invade Cuba, Mr. Krushchev's failure to deliver on this point raised questions still with us today, as to the subsequent solidity of Mr. Kennedy's promise.

Such was the Cuban missile crisis in bare outline. If it is to be more than a historical episode soon forgotten, and to serve as gui-dance for future leaders, it is important that we determine the lessons it contains. Aware of many differing views on the subject, I venture to propose the following list as worthy of study by future administrations arriving in Washington to assume the powers of governance.

• The first lesson derives from the contrast in performance of the president's advisers in the Bay of Pigs affair, where the outcome had been a disaster, with that of essentially the same advisers in the Cuban crisis, where the outcome

In my opinion, this difference resulted largely from the experience that these officials had acquired between crisis. They had learned how to operate the complicated machinery of goverument, how to start, stop, oil and repair it. Perhaps more important, they had had the time to become acquainted with one another, their respective turis of responsibility and their indi-vidual capabilities. In doing so, they had also learned to function as a team able to integrate the assets of several executive departments in carrying out the president's will.

The lesson in this case is simple. Every new administration should beware of its special vulnerability during at least the first year of tenure, retain at the start a few apolitical experts from the preceding administration to tide over its inexperience and try to avoid all crises as long as possible.

· A second lesson is the importance of recognizing that the president must inevitably be the manager of any crisis at the level of the National Security Council. Early in the Reagan administration, there was much debate over who should be designated in advance to manage crises as they arise. Any such designation of a crisis manager would probably be a waste of time since only the president can make the many decisions required during a crisis worthy of the name.

Who but President Kennedy could have picked the quarantine alternative as a means of evicting the missiles and issued the operational orders for implementing the decisions to subordinates such as the secretaries of state, defense, the CIA director and the senior military leaders of the armed forces? There are many time-consuming chores traditionally performed by a president from which he could and should be relieved. National crisis management is not one of them.

· Another important factor contributing to success in the Cuban crisis was the secrecy maintained during the planning phase and the surprise effect on Mr. Khrushchev of the president's Oct. 22 speech.

Aside from alerting the Soviet prime minister, any premature leakage of information re-garding the discovery of the missiles or the secret meetings of the EXCOMM would have released a flood of rumors and speculative press articles sure to stimulate congressional queries to the White House and similar requests for information from anxious allies abroad. One can only speculate as to what Mr.

Khrushchev would have done had he been warned. At a minimum he would have been spared the shock effect of the president's reve- nored a wise saying dating from Roman times:

An aerial photograph of San Cristobal, Cuba, in October 1962 showed missile erectors, tents and a launch position. lation and would have been able to prepare countermeasures in the form of threats, propaganda and appeals to the United Nations in order to gain time while completing the instal-lation of his weapons or concealing them. Surprised by the loss of surprise, Mr. Kennedy might have been forced into ill-prepared or unwise actions adversely affecting the outcome. Our great superiority in nuclear weapons contributed little to the outcome of the Cuban crisis. In this situation the stakes involved were far too small for either party to risk a resort to nuclear weapons. Hence our strategic strength had little applicability to the situation, whereas our conventional forces were indispensable. Since, in this category of strength, we were re-gionally superior and since the distance from ome prevented timely reinforcements from the Soviet Union, from the start Mr. Khrushchev was condemned to military failure in the Caribbean.

The lesson here is that nuclear superiority is of little use in coping with an adversary similarly armed, whereas conventional superiority at the right place and time is likely to carry the

 The foregoing, I believe, are the most important lessons to be drawn from our experience. But we can also derive benefit from Mr. Khrushchev's mistakes - particularly from Having underestimated the young president in the course of their Vienna meeting in June 1961, Mr. Khrushchev felt such confidence in his risky plan as to make no provision for any escape hatch in case things went badly. Things did go badly and he paid the price for ignoring Even more disastrous was Mr. Khrushchev's error in picking a fight far from home in his adversary's front yard. In doing so he ig-

"A cock has great influence on his own dunghill." Present-day American strategists contemplating military operations in the vicini-ty of Soviet dunghills should bear this truism in mind, and the price that Mr. Khrushchev paid for not following it.

This summary of important lessons in the Cuban crisis raises a final question — are the lessons of 1962 likely to be relevant in future crises, and, if so, will our leaders be able to apply them? There are several reasons to be doubtful on both points. ·Today it would be next to impossible to count on the secrecy which contributed so much to success in the Cuban crisis. At least two new obstacles would exist - the War Powers Act and the intragovernmental practice of leaking information. Had the War Powers Act existed in Mr.

Kennedy's time and had he followed it explicitly he would have been obliged to consult with Congress before announcing his decision to im-pose the quarantine, which might have involved the navy in hostile action, or to order the concentration of troops in Florida, where they were exposed to air attack from Cuba.

Privacy, Loyalty

Equally dangerous to secrecy would be the vicious practice of leakage by government offi-cials as a means of sabotaging a course of action of which they disapprove. A president to-day cannot count on either the privacy or the loyalty that Mr. Kennedy enjoyed.

Another missing asset would likely be the support that Mr. Kennedy received from the Organization of American States and the NATO allies. The rise of anti-Americanism in Latin America and our deteriorating relations with NATO nations would render most unlikely comparable allied backing today for crisis actions as boid as those of Mr. Kennedy.

far more powerful Soviet Union than did Mr. Kennedy. While the Russians would be just as far from home in the Western hemisphere as in 1962, they now enjoy a prestige based largely on imposing strategic power that would inject a new factor into crisis management—the possibility of nuclear intimidation.

MISSILE-READY TENT

The exaggerated importance attached in the Western world to Soviet superiority in number and size of strategie weapons along with the worldwide fear of nuclear World War III create an atmosphere inviting Moscow to try the stratagem of conquest by intimidation, something that was not conceivable in 1962. Can we and our allies resist this new aspect of an old My overall conclusion from this entire dis-

Repressive Methods of Smith Regime On the Rise in Black-Ruled Zimbabwe

Washington Post Service

I ARARE, Zimbabwe — Born two years ago amid bright hopes for democratic rule in black Africa, Zimbabwe is increasingly turning back to the repressive methods of white Rhodesia to stamp out dissent.

"It's like a replay of a nightmare," a veteran civil rights lawyer said. His white colleague nodded wearily in agreement and added, "We're back to source me."

"We're back to square one." Both men had risked careers and had been socially ostracized for years because of their efforts to prevent the oppression of blacks under the white Rhodesian regime of Ian Smith, the former prime minister. They had welcomed

The list included arbitrary arrests; torture; detentions without trial, access to legal assistance or even notification of families, and brutality of sol-diers toward villagers in rural areas believed to be harboring armed dissidents.

The two men and most other critics, both black and white, acknowledge emphatically that the extent of human rights violations under Mr. Mugabe is much less serious than during the Smith regime, which executed hundreds of black opponents and detained thousands, sometimes for more than 10 years. Others note that repression is much worse in neighboring South Africa. But the trend is serious, the crit-

Reaction to Rebellion

The deterioration in human rights has been an outgrowth of anti-government activity, mainly in sonthwestern Matabeleland province, where an estimated 2,000 dissidents have killed scores of people, staged numerous rob-beries and kidnapped six foreign tourists. The dissidents elaim loyalty to Joshua Nkomo, the opposition leader, who has disavowed their

No overall detention figures have been reased, but Sydney Sekeramayi, the minister of state in charge of the army, said 425 dissidents have been held in Matabeleland. It is believed that between 100 and 200 people are held in the Harare area for alleged anti-government

Estimates of the number detained under Mr.

Smith range between 2,000 and 3,000. There is little question that the government has reason to feel threatened, both by internal and external foes. It has suffered armed attacks, sabotage and threats in recent months. Mr. Mugabe's party headquarters in Harare was destroyed by a bomb in December, and his residence was attacked in June. About 2,000 troops have spent the past 10 weeks in a vain search for the tourists kidnapped in July.

The government has detained hundreds of people in Matabeleland and elsewhere without charge. It has undermined the judiciary by re-fusing to abide by a court order and concizing verdicts. It has reinstated the death penalty, which had been suspended since independence. The vast majority of the prisoners are black, but the outcry has usually centered on white detainers, who generally have better access to the legal machinery because of their economic A government official discounted growing

Western criticism; saying it had arisen only when whites were detained. 'A Fear Shared by All'

Senator Garfield Todd, the last moderate white prime minister of Rhodesia, who was himself detained for more than five years by the Smith government, recently told Parlia-ment of "a fear which is shared by all." He said, "No one can be confident that his color, his name or his party affiliation can guarantee his personal safety.

A senior black official in the Ministry of Education and Culture, Toby Moyana, disclosed to the Herald daily newspaper that he had been arrested in a hotel bar hy an army officer and held for six hours without any reason being given. While in prison, he said, he saw many incarcerated soldiers.

How, he asked, does such a person have "so much power that he can send a civilian like myself to detention for no reason whatsoever?" A hlack columnist who uses the pen name "Zingizi" wrote in the Sunday Mail, "I, too, and every thinking Zimbabwean would like, in fact are entitled, to know the answer to this question."

Noting the threats to the government, the columnist nevertheless said he could "not subscribe to the idea that, in order to preserve freedom, all methods, fair or foul, are permissi-ble, such as detaining anyone without rhyme or

Such criticism in the newspapers, run by a trust in which the government has controlling interest, is rare. There is no criticism on the government-owned radio and television.

Critical diplomats here are not willing to have their embassies identified, but in London this week the Foreign Office said Britain has expressed "very serious concern" over the detention and alleged torture of air force personnel, some of whom are British citizens. A Foreign Office spokesman said Defense Minister John Nott had raised the matter last month while on a visit to Zimbabwe during which he met with Mr. Mugabe.

A diplomat here familiar with such complaints to the government said officials "do not react too well" to the criticism.

Continued deterioration of the human rights situation could eventually endanger Western aid, some said, but a diplomat acknowledged, "Given the arguments for continuing aid, it would have to get a lot nastier before a cut-back was considered. Zimbabwe is one of Africa's major recipients of assistance, with pledges of about $2 billion in grants and loans, mainly from the West, for development and rehabilitation from the seven-year war for black-majorisaying he was a political necessity for Mr. Mu-gabe. Many voters' sons and husbands "were detained by Smith and nobody came around and asked them what they thought about it," the official said.

"People will think Mugabe is a white man in disgnise" if he does not act against alleged white opponents, he said, and added that Mr. Ushewokunze takes care of that need.

Comparison With Infant U.S.

"We are at a stage of history where the United States was after independence," the American-educated official said, unting that constitutional rights were abused then mainly because of fear of Britain.

However, he added, "we are doing it in a different setting," noting that there are "enemies" within the country and on the borders, a reference to South Africa. A South African military unit was discovered inside Zimbabwe in August, although South African officials said it was not on an "authorized" mission.

Another defender of Mr. Ushewokunze said many whites "will do anything they can to frustrate black rule" and noted that "there are still people in the police and courts who sympathize with the old order."

One human rights lawyer who fought the Smith regime said that the situation, although discouraging, is a far cry from the days of the white government that fought to prevent black "If you can put the information before the prime minister, Mugabe will act," he said. "It's not an ideal situation," he acknowledged, but Even those who were simply detained without trial, as were Mr. Mugabe and Mr. Nkomo for 10 years, became nonpersons. It was forbidden to mention their names in the media.

Today, as lawyers force the issue, prisoners in urban areas have been given access to lawyers and are informed broadly of their alleged offenses within seven days. However, the Smith regulations, though somewhat modified. still allow for indefinite detention.

Court hearings are aften closed, preventing publication of alleged violations of rights.

Most members of Mr. Mugabe's cabinet were detained during Mr. Smith's rule. The col-lective total of time served is probably several hundred years. Therefore, they do not regard "a month in the cooler as a terribly serious affair," a Western diplomat said.

To defend the current detentions on the basis of the past, however, "is a fallacious argument," he maintained. "They lought a war to and executed. The family often was not even end" such abuses, he said.

Reagan's Speechwriters: A Look Between the Lines

By Francis X. Clines New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — There are three distinct W speaking roles that Ronald Reagan must play as president, and his wordsmiths in-sist that his great strength as the nation's patriot-orator overcomes any shortcomings of the two other roles. These are the briefing-crammed president who can be a faltering target at news conferences, and the extemporaneous president who can ramble noteless and incamious at political gatherings as aides hold their breath.

Of these three roles, Aram Bakshian Jr. clearly is involved with the best one as the director of speechwriting for the president. He deals with the president's prepared remarks, laying out the proper thoughts like raiment for laying out the proper thoughts like raiment for the big speech, insisting he can serve as noth-ing more than the impeccable valet, and, above all, enjoying the sight and sound, as much as the content, of Mr. Reagan's delivery.

"I enjoy even the civic pieties," confessed Mr. Bakshian, a witty, literate 38-year-old who, unlike some administration toilers, has the grace in conversation to wander far afield from the relentless White House question of how the president is doing.

He keeps his hand in with the words of the world beyond Pennsylvania Avenue, and in the essays on history, humor and the arts that be has managed to compose and publish during his White House service, Mr. Bakshian takes care lately to list his speechwriting role as last, not first, in the thumbnail author's biography.

hot first, in the thumbhail author's biography.

He talked of speechwriting as "doing this stuff," and as "folding bandages" in the president's crusade. "Speechwriting is to writing as Muzak is to music." he said.

It may be revealing that lately Mr. Bakshian has been writing and thinking about the late Ayn Rand, the libertarian beroine, and her ficultious voice of Dagny Taggert in "Atlas Shrugged"—an "unlikely cross between Talinlah Bankhead and Henry Ford" is Mr. Bakshian's summary.

an's summary. "Her works, like Dale Carnegie courses, jogging and the Mormon religion, may strike out-siders as irrational or absurd," Mr. Bakshian observed. "But they give to their devotees a sense of purpose, direction, and fulfillment."

This latter point is clearly important to him and he honors it the same way as the civic pieties" that are required for the Reagan speeches, to remind Americans of "a world new based in morality." Mr. Bakshian insists that the best speech craftsman in the White House is the president himself, who served many years of apprenticeship as a spokesman for General Electric Co. His speechwriters say that Mr. Reagan often takes legal pad and felt-tip pen in hand to rewrite important addresses. Despite the chronic listings of President Reagan's public "misspeaking" and confusion of detail, his aides stress that the president believes in the power of good narrative bolstered by telling detail. They contend that the public forgives his mistakes because they sense his "thrust" toward a larger truth, and that to defensively abandon this approach would wither his basic political strength.

Dow to Sell South Korean Holdings

MIDLAND, Michigan — Dow Chemical has agreed to sell two holdings in South Korea to the Korea Explosives Group for $60 million by Nov. 15. The companies are Dow Chemical Korea, which Dow owns contribute and Korea Pacific Chemical Links and Links and outright, and Korea Pacific Chemical, which Dow owns 50-50 with Korean Pacific Chemical Holding.

Seoul supports the sale, which developed as a result of efforts to restructure South Korea's petrochemical industry, Dow said Monday. Dow will give the two companies technical support and will continue to do business in South Korea through Dow Chemical International.

Dow had invested $130 million in Dow Chemical Korea and $23.3 million in Korea Pacific Chemical since 1968, business sources in Seoul said. They said Dow had estimated that it had lost $60 million in South

U.S. Union to Reopen Chrysler Talks

DETROIT — Faced with the prospect of a rank-and-file rejection of a tentative agreement with Chrysler, the United Auto Workers union will resume negotiations with the company Friday, UAW President Douglas A. Fraser said Tuesday.

"Chrysler workers are extremely unhappy with the agreement," Mr. Fraser said. He said rejection of the tentative contract was certain even though voting would continue through Thursday.

Mr. Fraser said the union would give Chrysler a "ball-park figure" for an immediate wage increase. He said last week that the pact was probably doomed because workers wanted gnaranteed pay raises. The agreement provided for pay to be raised when profits reached $20 million.

Enka Foresees a Fiber Agreement

BONN - Enks, the West German chemical fibers arm of Akzo, expects European producers of chemical fibers to sign an agreement by the end of this month to reduce capacity by 480,000 metric tons, a spokes-

Enka is not certain how the cuts will be distributed but expects them to be based on products rather than countries, the spokesman said. He said European chemical fiber production in 1981 was 3.06 million tons, with capacity utilization at about 75 percent. Considerable overcapacity would still exist after the proposed cut, he added.

U.S. Company to Make Conti Tires

HANOVER, West Germany -- Continental Gummi-Werke has signed an agreement with General Tire and Rubber under which the U.S. company will produce 500,000 Conti tires a year for sale in the United States starting in mid-1983, a Conti-Gummi spokeswoman said Tuesday. Conti now exports about 500,000 tires a year to the United States.

General Tire, based in Akron, Ohio, will have access to Conti-Gummi technology for the production of steel-bonded truck tires. It will also be in a position to improve capacity use, the spokeswoman said. Last November, Conti, Europe's second largest tire manufacturer, signed a similar accord with Toyo Rubber of Japan for one million tires a year.

Du Pont Expects Lower Earnings

NEW YORK — Du Pont expects lower third-quarter earnings as a result of the recession, Chairman Edward G. Jefferson said Monday at an analysts' meeting in San Francisco.

In last year's third quarter — the first quarter that included results for Conoco — Du Pont earned $278 million, or $1.44 a share, on revenue of $7.15 billion. Mr. Jefferson said that Du Pont's traditional businesses, fibers and plastics, had been hit hard by the recession but that more diversified areas were faring better.

Irvine Real Estate Chief Resigns

NEWPORT BEACH, California - Peter Kremer, president of the Irvine Co., the largest private land owner in growing Orange County, has announced that he is resigning effective Jan. 1,

His announcement came amid rumors that the small group of private investors that owns Irvine — which holds one of the largest stretches of undeveloped land in Southern California — had entered into negotiations to sell the company to Mobil, the Los Angeles Times reported Tuesday. An Irvine spokesman devied the report, however, and a Mobil spokesman said he was not aware of any negotiations with Irvine.

The private investors, including the Detroit developer A. Alfred Taubman, Henry Ford 2d and the Los Angeles developer Donald Bren, outbid Mobil for Irvine at $337.4 million in 1977.

DUSSELDORF, West Germany — Mannesmann, Europe's biggest maker of steel pipe, is spending considerable money these days on other activities, as if it judged almost everything else it does as potentially more profitable than the pipe business.

But there is one thing that the company does not plan to change—its reliance on the Soviet Union as an important market. That policy is steadfast even though Mamesmann is embroiled in the dispute over supplying the Soviet gas pipeline.

Dow at 1,003 As NYSE Posts Mixed Results

NEW YORK — Profit-taking ended the market's four-day winning streak Tuesday and caused stock prices to close mixed. However, the Dow Jones industrial average remained above the 1,000 mark for the second day in a row.

The average seesawed through-out the day, falling 14 points dur-ing the morning, reversing to show a gain of more than six points by midafternoon and then declining again to close off about 9.11 points io 1,003.68

Other market indexes showed fractional gains. Volume slipped to 126.31 million shares from 138.53 million Monday but the number of trades was particularly large. The tape, which records stock transactions, ran as much as 65 minutes late during the day and was 55 minutes late at the closing bell.

Analysts said the large number of trades indicates that the public has entered the market, which was dominated by institutional investors in the early days of the rally. Over the prior four sessions the Dow Jones average had risen a to-tal of 110.96 points and it closed

Monday above 1,000 for the first time in 16 months. Analysts considered Tuesday's setback only temporary while investors consolidated their gains.

waiting to come into the market on any correction." James Solloway, economist with Argus Research Group, said, "We would expect to see some minor pullback, possibly as far back as the 960 to 950 level, but by year end the market could be above 1,050 on the Dow."

The average's highest close on record was 1,051.70 on Jan 11,

"There is still a tremendous amount of money on the sidelines

— I don't even think it's been scratched," said Chester Pado of G. Tsai and Co.

Much of Tuesday's profit-taking centered on the blue chip and speculative issues that reflected the most spectacular gains during the recent rally.

The report, written by a threeman committee headed by Lord Hunt of Tanworth, cabinet secretary from 1973 to 1979, said cable should be allowed to develop so as to provide the maximum variety and choice for the viewer, with the minimum of constraints necessary to safeguard public service broadcasting and the wider public inter-

Monetarists in U.S. Disagree On Fed's New View of M-1

Milton Friedman, a Nobel noreate and the most prominent proponents of monetarism, mainained Monday that the Federal Veserve is continuing a policy of olerating wide swings in the prowth of the nation's basic money supply. Mr. Friedman opposes such a policy.

"I don't know what all the fuss s about," he said in an interview. He added that he accepted the Fed's explanation that its decision to temporarily tolerate more rapid not represent a policy change.

But other monetarists expressed fear that the Federal Reserve is in the process of making a basic shift in strategy that will put primary emphasis our controlling interest rates rather than money supply growth. "The internal procedures of the Fed give me little confidence," said Karl Brunner of the University of Rochester and the University of Bern, who is co-chairman of the Shadow Open Market Committee, a group of economists, mostly monetarists, who monitor and crit-icize actions taken by the Fed's policy-making committee. Monetarists had generally ap-plauded the October 1979 switch in Federal Reserve policy because they favor slow and steady growth in the money supply as the best way to curb inflation. The latest developments have raised the specier among some monetarists the ones who are convinced that the Fed is changing course - that it is risking a new surge of infla-

If the Fed starts putting more money into the economy to assure that interest rates continue to fall, some economists warned, it could produce a dangerous backlash.

The big threat to the explosive rally in the stock and bond markets would come if the Fed started to pump money into the system," said H. Erich Heinemann, a Wall Street economist and a member of the Shadow Open Market Com-mittee. "It would increase inflationary expectations and actually lead to higher interest rates." Mr. Heinemann is among those who think the Fed has made a significant policy change.

Paul A. Volcker, chairman of Federal Reserve Board, insisted Saturday in a speech that the central bank had not abandoned the fight against inflation through tion in coming weeks to changes in the M-I, the money supply mea-sure that includes cash and the deposits in checking accounts.

Mr. Friedman commented that, although there might be no change in the Fed's basic policy, there had been a change in the Reagan administration's rhetoric.

Both Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan and Beryl Sprinkel, the undersecretary for monetary af-fairs, have encouraged the Fed to overshoot its targets for M-1 growth if the Fed thinks it is necessary to do so. Mr. Regan and Mr. Sprinkel see more rapid money supply growth — for a short penod of time — as a way of bringing down interest rates, which in turn would stimulate the economy and bring it out of the recession. In the past they had been highly critical of money supply volatility, calling

Mr. Sprinkel, widely regarded as the monetarists' chief representa-tive at the Treasury, insisted that a temporary period of more rapid growth would simply reflect "noise in the system" and would not und-ermine the objectives of both the central bank and the administration to reduce inflation and inter-

Some monetarists outside the government were more critical. however. Allan H. Meltzer, the other co-chairman of the Shadow Open Market Committee and a professor at the Carnegie-Mellon Institute of Pittsburgh, said: "Here we go again. It used to be that we would have bulges in the money supply every presidential election year, but now we're getting them every two years for the congressional elections as well."

Mr. Meltzer, who shares Mr. Friedman's view that the Fed's latest moves lack much significance, said he expected M-1 growth this year to be about 6½ percent, or 1 percentage point above the top limit of the Fed's target. Last year the growth of M-1B, which corresponds to today's M-1, was 2.1

Mexico Called Confident of IMF Loan

Fund Expected to Provide Credit Without Imposing Tough Austerity Plan

By Alan Riding

New York Times Service MEXICO CITY - The govern-ment is confident that the International Monetary Fund will provide it with much-needed emergency credit without imposing an austeri ty program that could phinge the country into a prolonged depres-sion, senior Mexican officials say.

The officials, who asked not to be identified, said Monday that informal agreement had been reached with a negotiating team from the IMF for signature before President José López Portillo leaves office on Dec. 1.

The officials said the negotiating team, which was to return to Washington for further discussions with the fund's managing director, Jacques de Larosière, had accepted Mexico's contention that deep cuts in the government's budget deficit would bring on a slump that would prevent Mexico from repaying its hage foreign debt.

"I think the fund has come to accept that ours is a special case," a key official said. "I think it realizes that a suspension of payments by us is worse than showing some flexibility towards Mexico." Some IMF officials, however. are said to be worried that a tolerant attitude toward Mexico's fi-nancial crisis could set a dangerous precedent for possible negotiations agreement will provide Mexico with other major debtor nations, among them Argentina, Brazil, Venezuela and Peru

If the terms negotiated so far with Mexico are accepted, the Mexican officials said, a formal letter of intent will be signed by Finance Minister Jesus Silva Herzog and approval will be sought from the fund for a $4-billion loan over three years.

The officials conceded that the fund had only reluctantly accepted that Mexico would maintain full foreign exchange controls, a twotiered exchange rate, tight import controls and domestic interest rates far below the current rate of inflation. But Mexico has agreed to limit its new foreign borrowing next year to $5 billion, they said.

The key point of contention in the discussions with Mexico ap-pears to have been the size of the budget deficit, which this year is expected to reach a record 17 percent of the gross national product. The fund reportedly favored reducing the deficit to 6 percent of GNP, but eventually accepted a deficit of 10 percent in 1983, the officials said.

The sharp cut in government spending next year is expected to result in close to zero economic growth, but the officials argued that reduction of the deficit to 6 percent of GNP would have provoked major corporate bankruptwidespread unemployment and increased social unrest.

Although the Mexican govern-

Earlier this month, the Mexican Finance Ministry informed the government's leading creditors that it would be unable to repay any principal on its $60-billion foreign debt before 1984, thus effectively extending for more than one year the current 90-day "moratorium" on principal payments, which is scheduled to end Nov. 23.

The ministry nevertheless stressed that Mexico would meet about $12 billion in interest payments due in both 1982 and 1983. Foreign bankers in Mexico have confirmed that the public sector is paying interest on its debts with-out significant delays, but neither interest nor principal is being paid on the private sector's $20-billion foreign debt. "Companies keep arguing that the Bank of Mexico is not selling them the dollars they need," said an American banker who asked not to be named The government's Foreign Instment Commission announced

Monday that foreign creditors of Mexican companies would be allowed to acquire stock in these companies in lieu of cash repayment. The American banker, however, said this was not an attractive offer to foreign banks.

The ministry also estimated that Mexico's current account pay ments deficit would be reduced from a record $13 billion last year to $5.9 billion this year and $2.7 billion in 1983 as a result of a sharp cut in imports.

Dollar Deposits Decline The Mexican central bank said Monday that total dollar account deposits in Mexico fell to $5.9 billion from $11.6 billion in the four weeks following the nationaliza-tion of private banks Sept. 1, Renters reported from Mexico

City.

The withdrawals were all in Mexican pesos, in line with the government decree Aug. 13 ordering all dollar account withdrawals to be paid at about 70 pesos to the

The French rule, adopted with little notice two years ago, is only beginning to affect computer and data-processing firms outside France, industry sources said. But its long-term implications are im-

Most nations traditionally have valued creative commodities such as books or phonograph records according to their material con-tent, not the work that went into producing them. But whatever the reason, software suppliers fear that other countries with sophisticated data-processing industries will adopt the French system, producing a wave of protectionist measures

"The French are very good at this industry, and what they are trying to do is protect it," said Jerry Dryer, president of the Associa-tion of Data Processing Service Organizations. "They are forcing us, economically, out of the mark-etplace in France." In fact, industry sources said U.S. suppliers have felt little direct impact from the French rule, partly because IBM and other major data-processing companies have French subsidiaries and partly be-cause the material can be shipped into France duty free through Britain and other countries in the European Community that do not use the French system.

have actually lost business yet, but if the European Commity bar-monizes its policies internally, we could be in trouble," said David Brock, the U.S. trade representation" of international customs

The problem arose in 1980 when EC nations acceded to an international agreement on customs valuation. The French customs service, in an official bulletin instructing its agents how to apply the code, said duties on computer software were to be levied on "the total billed price, including the costs relative to the development of the program when these are included in the price."

CAMP

By Alan Saperstein, 248 pp. $12.95. Ticknor & Fields, 52 Vanderbilt Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017,

Reviewed by Charles Gaines

A LAN SAPERSTEIN'S second novel. "Camp," calls up an image: an early summer morning in a glade surrounded by old heavy trees; an arrow flies across the glade, glint-ing in the sun, bores ioto one of the old trees, shivers for a second and is still; nothing else happens. This novel is that quick and savage, that mysteriously menacing and dreamlike, It is a horror story told around a camplire, a nightmare spinning together obsession, demented power and the violation of innocence. In one of its scenes a melancholy little boy who is given to seizures, the stuttering son of a poet. saws off with a stone and with "innocent iotensity" the head of a sparrow to see what makes it sing. The entire novel does something like the same thing, and does it so graphically that it will very likely hauot you for some time after you have finished reading. Saperstein, whose first novel, "Mom Kills Kids and Self," was widely praised, is a wooderfully vivid writer. If in his efforts to bring words to the eye he is capable of occasional sentences as ungainly as, "Like loco-motive smoke and track clacks, Geoff Thomason let out a chain of chest rales and shallow breaths in ironic rales and shallow breaths in tronic counterpoint to his inch by inch maneuvering toward the examination room, he is also capable of ooes precise and luminous with meaning:

"It was an image that never changed, not even in the smallest detail, and yet it had oo detail. It was indescribable, it was the analysis of the state of the small process." it just was, the way one's image of school just is, or of army life, or of the business world, or a stay in a hospital, or of traveling abroad, marriage, old age, death, all images that time and

The particular image being discussed here is the archetypal one of a summer camp where secure, sturdy children play and study oature and sing and hike and dance and swim in a fresh, healthy environment, and that image is articulated by alluring prose and photographs in a brochure pre-pared by the Geoff Thomason men-tioned above. When Thomason was 14 months old his parents abandoned him in his high chair, accidentally, for three days to go on a belated honey-moon. Out of hunger and thirst, Tho-mason ate his own thumb and he gramasoo ate his own thumb and he ocver got over it. His mentor and healer is a towering, rock-hard chiropractor named Dr. Stone who has genius in his hands and a deranged mission to

Stone and Thomason co-found Camp Freedom and attract to it a small group of variously abandoned little boys, none of them secure or sturdy, and two counselors, Francis and Frances, who learn on their arrival there that the real Camp Freedom does not correspond very well to Thomason's image. In the New Jersey Pine Barrens, the place has oo playing fields or tennis courts, no theater or science lab or bridle paths, not even running water or toilets or electricity, but only a small collection of collapsing cabins, a leech-filled stream and a scabby clearing.

It becomes apparent, irrevocably nd immediately, as things do in a dream, to the boys, to Frances and Francis, to a number of other young counselors who show up later, and to Gus, a boozy old local who is captured and forced by Stooe to serve as the camp cook (the novel's sometimes narrator), that they are caught here pinned like so many butterflies to

Solution to Friday's Puzzle

Camp Freedom by Stone's obsessions. We ore told that there is no cruel ambition, no secret depravity to be found in the characters of Stone and Thomason, "Only the relentless desire of the one to save the world and of the other to spread the gospel. And that," observes old Gus, "was even more terrifying than pure and simple malevo-

In his efforts to purge the campers of physical and mental illness. Stone regularly and painfully adjusts their small backs on a reck-like chrome table; he dangles them over the leech-infested stream; he threatens to throw them into ditches full of their own waste. Incidents of horror, stark as raisins stuck into the dough of the commonplace, begin to multiply. The sparrow is murdered, as are two local dwarfs who have a grudge against the camp. One boy disappears, another goes catatonic, and another permanently sleepless in trying not to wet his bed. A parent, then a policeman "without jurisdiction," more parents, and finally a television news team, come and go, again as in a nightmare, with no power to help, no power to change the landscape of the nightmare or to alter its course — a course which brings both Camp Freedom and "Camp," finally, to a truly chilling end.
Just before he escapes that end,

Gus, the bewigged, grizzled, humane narrator, tells a story to the campers around a campfire, o story that serves as a little paradigm for the novel. Before he begins it, one of the boys asks if the story is scary.

"All stories are scary," says Gus,
"Camp" is a story and it is very scary, but it is also very skillfully written and completely gripping, and all of us oeed to be scared from time to Charles Gaine's last novel was "Dangler." He wrote this review for The Washington Post.

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

ONE of the most popular feats of the great Harry Houdini was to out himself in some dangerous and improbable situation, manacled in a box in a river for example and then make a triumphant escape.

Two bridge players are on record in the literature of the game as having taken this hair-raising procedure one step further, in o technical way: They deliberately refused to escape. In both cases, as one might expect, the vulnerability favored imaginative antics.

Back in 1951. Terence Reese, the British star, playing in an international trial contributed a parability and the start of t at trial, contributed a psychic overcall of one no-trump. He held a worthless hand with a long, weak minor suit and one might expect that he would have escaped into that suit when doubled. Instead he stood his ground and went down seven tricks, losing 1,300. His teammates bid and made a vulnerable grand slam, worth 2,210, but he would have shown a profit if the result in the other room had been just 1,430.

The danger of this maneuver, of course, is that the partner may have the tricks to defeat a grand slam and that the penalty will be greater than the value of a vulnerable game to the opposition.

The hero on the second occasion was Garry Davis of New York, o popular veteran whose death was lamented by the senior members of the New York bridge fraternity. In the 1959 Knickerbocker Tournament here he held the South cards and beard his partner open one club in third position. After East's take-out double, he decided to confuse the issue with a bid of one oo-trump.

West naturally doubled to show reasonable high-card strength, and when this was passed around to Dav-is, he made one of the most imaginative passes in history. A major-suit lead would have defeated the contract by a trick, but West led a diamond and South had eight tricks for a score of 180 points.

In retrospect, East was perhaps wrong to pass his partner's double, but it was certainly difficult to foresee the danger.

Io the replay Davis's teammates, S.
Garton Churchill and Tom Throop, bid efficiently to six diamonds with the East-West cards. With the spades 3-3, this contract presented no diffi-culty. With another spade break, the declarer would have had to guess the location of the heart queen, not a difficult task after an opening hid by North.

East-West could have saved a few points by saving in seven clubs going down 1.100. The episode was reported by Churchill in his magnum opus, "Churchill Natural Bidding Style at Contract Bridge."

The British government alone can intercept what threatens to be another blot on its country's reputation. But its minister for sport, Neal MacFarlane, is a complacent and ill-informed man who sees the hooligan problem as a figment of press imagination. His foreign off-

S. Africa Facing Further Isolation

JOHANNESBURG - The thened stance toward South Africa adopted by the Com-monwealth Games Federation in Australia last week is a major threat to this country's tennous international sporting ties after a two-year boom.

From late 1979 until the end of year, South Africans again matched themselves against the world in a variety of arenas after a bleak decade when sports boycotts were widely used to display international opposition to the country's apartheid racial policies.

But the news this year, mainly for South Africa's sports-mad whites but also for black fans, has not been good. The CGF's adopting a code of conduct aimed at barring all sports contact with South Africa leaves the country facing a yet another period of iso-

The chief victim seems likely to be the white national sport, rugby, which has enjoyed a wealth of international competition during the past two years.

South Africa's national rigby team, the Springboks, made their first major overseas tour for five years last year to New Zealand and to the United States. But the ferocity of the protests that greeted their every move in New Zealand seems likely to ensure that it will be their last for a long time. ----

The new conduct code, which provides for suspension from fu-ture Commonwealth Games for a country whose teams or individuals compete in or against South Africa, also seems certain to jeop-ardize the scheduled 1985 New Zealand rugby tour here.

The next Commonwealth Games will be held in Scotland the following year.
The British Isles, France, Ire-

squad have all toured South Africa in the past two years. But planned tours by Wales and Scotland have already been called off and a scheduled tour next year by France, not a Commonwealth member, looks doubtful.

Danie Craven, the South African Rugby Board president, called the CGF action "an act of cowarthe CGF action "an act of cowardice and hypocrisy." He added that rugby's controlling bodies would not be dictated to by the Denis McIldowie, vice-chairman of the South African Olympic and National Games Association, had a different reaction. "There is no doubt that this is the worst thing to have happened to South African sport since our expulsion from the Olympic movement," he said. South Africa has not competed at the Olympics since 1960. The future also looks bleak on Between October 1979 and last April, South Africa staged five world boxing title fights. The local contender lost in all of them, and apart from heavyweight Gerrie Coetzee, who is in the United States hoping for a chance at a third title shot, there are few fighters here with world-class talent.

Cards, Brewers Tailored to Their Parks

ST. LOUIS - With the World Series set to begin here Tuesday night, baseball was to witness the most dramatic, and perhaps most significant, contrast in playing styles since the National League champions of the 1920s were forced to cope with the home runs of the New York Yankees. What the Milwankee Brewers, an excellent team built along entirely traditional lines, were to see is a sprint-relay St. Louis Cardinal team that symbolizes a baseball revolution as surely as Babe Ruth's Yankees were the embodiment of the bvely ball era. In fact, within a few days many casual fans may suddenly be stark-ly aware of a trend that those inside the game have been watching with fascination and suspiciou for much of the last decade: Baseball is becoming two sports, one in cozy grass parks and another in spacious artificial turf pinball ar-

Teams built for one surface especially the denizens of the slowpaced grass world — often find themselves disoriented, dazzled and demoralized when exposed to the other form of the game.

Never before in any World Series has a true turf terror — these Cardinals stole 200 bases while chopping and chipping hits to all fields — played an old-fashioned grass behemoth such as the Brewers, with their 216 homers and their five consecutive hitters averaging 109 runs.

Actually, a grass team has met a turf team only four times in the Series, in 1971, '72, '75 and '76; on the last three occasions, the turf team was the Cincinnati Reds — a club built around such players as Johnny Bench, Tony Perez and Pete Rose, whose excellence had nothing to do with the fields on which they played.

evenly matched Series, only one fact needs citing. The Brewers are first in baseball with 216 home runs while the Cardinals are last with 67 — a power gap of 149. Nothing even remotely approaching that has ever happened.

Both Milwankee and St. Louis are middle-American cities, proud of maintaining traditional values, perhaps defiantly proud of not fol-lowing the fads of either coast. As Brewer Cecil Cooper said Monday: "I think it's great that we get some new blood in the World Series. Every year, it seems like it's the Dodgers and Yankees" — who met in 1977, '78 and '81. "This will give people a chance to see some

Both teams, the wisecrack goes, were built by Cardinal General Manager Whitey Herzog. Obviously, Herzog has completely transformed St. Louis, applying the same ideas that brought him three division titles with the Kansas City

The other edge of the blade is that one of Herzog's many trades was a colossal bonanza for the Brewers. Harry Dalton, the Milwaukee mastermind, relieved Herzog of 1981's most valuable player, Rollie Fingers, along with potential '82 Cy Young winner Pete Vuckovich and all-star catcher Ted Simmons (96 RBIs) in exchange for Lary Sorensen, Sixto Lezcano and Dave Green, How appropriate that Milwaukee's Dalof its way to look hairy, dirty, rognish and intimidating — should have been sparked to greatness by a virtual robbery.

Be all that as it may the 1982

Be all that as it may, the 1982 Series will probably be best remembered as the first of what may become many vital showdowns between teams so tailored to their tage suddenly reaches the disproportionate importance usually associated with pro basketball.

The Brewers, winners of the first pennant in franchise history, are a club built along the classic lines of the 1950s Yankees and Dodgers. They have five players with more than 95 RBIs while the Cards have only one. Milwaukee has compotent, if unspectacular, starting pitching as Don Sutton and Vuckovich will follow Game 1 starter Mike Caldwell. The Brewer infield is wonderfully adept.

On the down side, Milwaukee's defensive range in the outfield was average before Gorman Thomas (a questionable starter Tuesday) hurt his right knee and Ben Oglivie (who probably will start) bruised his ribs last weekend. That range could be even worse now. The Cardinals are just the sort of linedrive, gap-hitting team that could expose the Brewers' limits and injuries, especially here.

Also, Simmons's arm behind the plate has its ups and downs. Down time against the Cardinals, who have seven double-figure bases stealers, led by Lonnie Smith with 68, could be disastrous.

If the Baltimore Orioles could get three steals and work two suc-cessful hit-and-runs in last Sunday's playoff game against Milwaukee, only pleas for mercy may stop the St. Louis basepath

The Cardinals have fair-to-middling starting pitching, a great bullpen with Bruce Sutter and Doug Bair, a slightly above-aver-age offense (lifth in the National League in runs) and a defense with surrealistic range in the outfield and at shortstop, where Ozzie Smith might become a national cult figure.

The Cardinals will follow opening-game starter Bob Forsch with dujar (15-9). If these hardly seem like the fellows necessary to incarcerate the Brew Crew, whose 891 runs this season were 206 more than St. Louis scored, now hear this: Forsch, Stuper and Andujar allowed only 35 homers in 607 innings. Like the whole St. Louis staff, which only allowed 94 home runs, they specialize in low fastballs that

St. Louis has only three bluechip offensive players — Lonnie Smith (.307, 120 runs scored), Keith Hernandez (.299, 94 RBIs) and George Hendrick (.282, 101 RBIs) - to the Brewers' six. Even if reliever Fingers remains a mystery man, it seems unlikely that the Brewer staff will give the Cardinals more than a handful of stolen runs. In other words, no easy vic-

are not unhittable but are often unhomerable.

In the final analysis, this Series cannot be analyzed. These teams have never played. In fact, it's probable that no two excellent teams that are so opposite have ever met for such high stakes. At least not since the '20s.

The Cardinals could run the tired Brewers to dust, rob them of extra base hits with their outfield speed and neutralize their power with smart pitching and a big park.

Or the Cardinals might not average more than three runs a game under Series tension, and the Brewers, who have four pretty fair slashing "turf" style hitters batting in a row — No. 9 Jim Gantner, Paul Molitor, Robin Yount and Cooper - might have a surprisingly easy time.

The best that can be hoped is a fortnight of vivid parrying between these utterly different approaches to the same game.

No two teams ever seemed like better foils to bring out the best, and expose the worst, in each

Axes on the Right

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — A dozen years ago we had "the new left." which could have been more aptly called, "the goofy left." Their goal was to destroy "the system." After-wards, they said, something nice would come along to replace it. Now we have "the new right." Since it's embodied in President Reagan, who came to power in a landslide, we can't call it "the goofy right" without slandering the American electorate. Still, there are parallels with the now defunct goofy left."

For example, there's the same destructive hostility toward "the system." Whereas the old new left-ists talked a fierce attack on "the system." the Reagan people are going at it with wrecking balls and bulldozers and "the system" is

Both "the new right" and the last decade's lefusts attacked "the system" for high-minded motives. The leftists envisioned its replacement by a society in which people would tend flowers and listen to music instead of being greedy and making war. We are not talking about bad people, we are talking about dreamers who, whether in "new left" or "new right" costuming, hope to uplift the country, about people who cherish the dream so fondly that they are willing to make a mess to see it realized.

Reagan's critics may say that he and his crew are more ruthless

than the new lefties were, but this is not a valid distinction either. True, "the new left" sometimes contented itself with sticking daisies in rifle barrels, but sometimes they also blew np the physics lab and people inside it. The chief difference between the two is that the rightists are politically affective and the leftists weren't. This is why the Reagan-administration has had more success in attacking "the system" in two years than the leftists had in

And so it is Ronald Reagan rather than Herbert Marcuse, who finds himself presiding over a spreading junkyard of wrecked "system" parts. And it has been left to Reagan, rather than to Professor Marcuse, to discover that something better just doesn't, well, happen, once "the system" starts collapsing.

There is some evidence that the president is now worned about this. He is starting to fight to re-store some of the shattered tax base which resulted from the "new right" economics he championed last year. The "new right" theory held that by destroying the tax base, capital that had once been absorbed by the government would flow into investment to make the economic heart it has been absorbed. make the economy boom. It hasn't happened. What has happened is the worst recession in the memory of most living Americans.

A problem of dreamers is they tend to be inflexible in their desire tend to be milestible in their desire to bring upilit to humanity. And so, in his move to restore some of "the system," the president now faces his first heavy opposition from those on the right who, true believers, hold that genuine economic salvation lies not in restoring the old "system," but in waiting for something, well, better, to sprout in its ruins. After watching the president's and the Senate's clownish posturing on the constitutional amendment to require eternal budget balancing, it's mildly encouraging to see them at grips with reality.

The new leftists now have mostly got haircuts, put on store-bought clothes and gone to work for corporations, and only a few of the hardiest holdouts accuse them of selling out. I'd say they grew up. which, though possibly sad, is inevitable. We probably don't have a lot of time for the Reagan people to undergo the process.

Virgil Thomson

There Has Been Nothing Novel in Music For a Very Long Time

By Lon Tuck Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Virgil Thomson, who is about to be 86, cheerily points to a chair on his left and tells you to ait there "because the left ear is the one that hears a little bit. Sit fairly close," he adds, "because if you're as far away as the door over there what I will hear will be like the captain of the plane making the motors go wah-wah-wah " Despite his years, Thomson's hearing seems to be the only thing that is either out of whack or out of sorts with the cherubic American sage who had the talent and the tact to collaborate with Gertrude Stein on "Four-

NEW YORK — It was an American opera that had everything — words by Gertrude Stein, music by Virgil Thomson, choreography by Frederick Ashton, production by John Manager and the control of the Control o by John Houseman and the daring use of an all-black operatic cast. Everything but Now, 48 years after its first and only fully staged perform-ance, "Four Saints in Three Acts" has been completely recorded, much to the delight of the composer.

"It's not a very popular work. It was not made into a movie or recorded or even published at the time of its premiere," Thomson said recently, But it did become a legend, due to a unique concurrence of talents and a freshness of music that combined blues-tinged gospel with Baptist hymns, Spanish rhythms and parodies of operatic recitative.

In 1974, it was performed in concert and a recording was made of excerpts. Last year, a concert performance at Carnegie Hall led to the decision to make a complete recording, which will be issued by Nonesuch Digital Records.

actity and wit to preside over American music as the critic of the New York Herald Tribuna. Only recently his "A Virgil Thomson Reader" won the Na-tional Book Critics Circle Award. Thomson was in Washington for a concert of his music that launched the Kennedy Center's "American Composers" series in the Terrace Tneater.

The hearing is a problem, be-cause although the device that has been placed in his left ear makes conversation simple enough, the sound of music doesn't come out night anymore. Notes below violin G are threequarters flat. Things above mid-dle C are irregularly sharp. On some instruments there are trou-blesome overtones. It makes strings a complexity. I do my best with trumpets.

"So I never go to concerts and the opera, unless I have another reason to go, like be a part of it. And I don't go that much to the theater, though I can hear better in London than in New York. They speak clearly over there. But in New York they speak down and numble. Fhones are good, except in Paris, where they have a weak signal."

One starts to express sympathy about the frustration he must feel and he breaks in breezily, "It's not frustration. It's a condition. That's all. I still write music all the time. You know, there's nothing new about a composer who is

It hasn't occurred to him to be despondent. "I'm not one of those sad characters who spends half of a life with a shrink. I've never been to a psychiatrist and so I don't feel guilty. I've never been given a reason to feel

Nor is he the kind of aging artist who sees Western culture going to hell in a handbasket at the hands of the younger generation. Quite the contrary. He even approves of the new biography of Nadia Boulanger, which uncovers a few not entirely complimentary details about the legendary French teacher who was Thomson's friend.

"It's not a very good book, but it does get into print some infor-mation that needs to be there. Perhaps this is the beginning of the debunking. But that's not all bad. Why should Nacia — any more than Toscanini or even Jesus Christ — be able to fly on a cloud into eternity without even a bump?

He does not, though, pretend that either music or painting is in anything like a Golden Age. There are dips and there are crests and this is a dip. There has been nothing novel in music for a very long time. The nearest thing to a new movement is Philip Glass, and Reich and Riley. It's not radically new, but maybe it is

Over the years Thomson has amassed as wide a circle of friends. - although feuds erupt from time to time - as anyone in music.

He has composed about 100 musical portraits of them, written during sittings much as a painter would do an oil portrait. Ten of them were on the program, in-cluding four premieres. They follow a standard formula, even in the titles, as in, for instance, "Persistently Pastoral: Aaron Copland (Oct. 16, 1942)." "I have to do these from life," he explains. "I take a pad and a pencil and look at you and keep writing notes. I have found that my attention span in these works is about an hour and a half, so that means that most of them are short. One difference from the painters is that they like to keep sitters awake by jabbering at them. But I don't want any talk. I can't write music and talk at the same time. They are welcome to sleep or read a book, though. That day with Aaron he came over and just sat. I don't remem-ber whether I gave him lunch or

At his apartment in New York's Chelsea Hotel, Thomson says, "These days I answer letters and write music. And when I have nothing else to do I take a nap or read a book." He prefers spy and detective novels. His income is ample and, he points out with a twinkle, "the apartment is under rent control." At the end of the interview, at the home of a friend here, Thomson insists on providing an escort to the elevator.

As the door slides open he shakes hands and cautions with a touch of glee, "Be sure to clean up anything I said that was ub-
